The Lighthouse Discovery

One breezy afternoon, Maya was walking along the rocky shore near her aunt's cottage. As she climbed over some large stones, she saw something unusual—a tall, old lighthouse hidden behind a group of pine trees. Curious, she stepped closer and noticed a narrow path leading to its door. The door creaked open when she pushed it gently. Inside, dust danced in the light, and the room smelled of salt and old wood.

Excited, Maya told her aunt what she had found. Her aunt smiled. "That lighthouse once belonged to your great-uncle," she said. "He used it to guide ships at night. No one has been inside for many years." Maya and her aunt decided to clean the lighthouse. Each weekend, they swept the floors, cleaned the windows, and polished the old lantern. As they worked, her aunt shared stories about Maya's great-uncle and how he loved the sea.

Soon, the lighthouse stood tall and bright again, and Maya felt proud. "It feels like I'm connecting with my great-uncle," she said happily.

Grammar: [20]1. Read the following passage carefully: [6]

Leah grew up in different cities around the world, as her parents were often invited to international tech events. Both of them were experts in artificial intelligence and held important positions in a major software company. Despite their success, they rarely had time for Leah. She spent long hours at home with books and gadgets but missed the warmth of a close family. She once emailed her parents expressing her feelings, but they replied with a promise they never kept. Leah began to wonder—can success truly make people happy if they forget the simple joys of being together?
